Since 1630, in the heart of Grande Champagne, ten generations of Ferrand's passed down not only their name but their knowledge of vines and distillation. Current owner Alexandre Garbriel has spend the last 28 years perfecting the techniques of the Ferrand family, and connoiseurs agree Pierre Ferrand cognacs are made in a style now rare in the spirits business, a style that pays full respect to the fruit of patient work and great terroir.

The spirit of France, Armagnac is produced just south of Cognac in Gascony. With roots as far back as the 10th century, it is the oldest style of french brandy and produced on smaller farms. This small batch production has been a well kept secret of the French as they historically kept this complex brandy for themselves.

The Roger Groult family distillery is in the heart of the Pays d'Auge region where they have been making their Calvados for five generations. They grow 30 varieties of apples on their 65 acre estate and only use very old oak barrels in their long aging process to allow the essence of apples to always remain the focus.

Despite being clear in color, pisco is not simply unaged grape brandy. In fact, in Peru, all piscos must be aged a minimum of 3 months in glass or stainless steel. Pisco is made from a variety of grapes creating a wide variation in flavor and can be single varietal expressions, known as “puro”, or a blend of grapes, or “acholado”.
